CSAO86 employs the "Limit States Design" method which evaluates for safety at the ultimate load and serviceability at the working load. These specified strengths and modulus of elasticity are based on extensive testing performed by the lumber industries in Canada and in the United States. Their joint comprehensive program involved testing thousands of pieces of dimension lumber to destruction to determine their inservice characteristics. The values given above apply to lumber that is graded in accordance with NLGA Standard Grading Rules for Canadian Lumber. The values shown are intended to be used by qualified designers, in conjunction with the appropriate adjustment factors found in the CSA 086 Standard. Design tables, examples and background information can be found in the Canadian Wood Council's Wood Design Manual which includes a copy of CSA 086 supplemented with commentary material. Buy the paper copy Volume I Buy the paper copy Volume II To support a larger use of CLT, the 2019 Edition of the CLT Handbook has been completely revised and improved based on new research performed by FPInnovations and partners to reflect changes made since the 2011 edition in recent Canadian codes and standards, including new guidance recently implemented in the CSA O8619 standard.

The handbook is a musthave for every professional interested in building with CLT in Canada and beyond. In-depth, multidisciplinary and peer-reviewed information on all performance attributes of CLT construction; Includes the new CLT provisions in the Canadian Standards Association's Standard in Engineering Design in Wood; NEW. An extra chapter provides a design prototype of an eight-storey mass timber building. Get your copy now Buy the paper copy Volume I Buy the paper copy Volume II This technique, far from being new, could prove to be a cost-competitive solution for floors with long spans since the mechanical properties of the two materials act in complementarity. This guide, which contains numerous illustrations and formulas to help users better plan their projects, addresses many aspects of the design of timber-concrete composite floors, for example shear connection systems, ultimate limit state design, vibration and fire resistance of floors, and much more. Buy the paper copy. It's easy to find basic information using Google, but to find high-quality, specific engineering info you need to use dedicated research tools and databases! See my page on researching off-campus. If you aren't sure, do some preliminary reading and searching using general terms to figure out what you might pick. There's more advice here. You should always use several search tools and types of sources for a good paper. If you are starting out and want an overview of a topic, look for Books and other background info here. If you are looking for the newest research on a very specific question, or your professor has told you to use peer-reviewed articles, you can use a Research Article database. And we have Design Codes and Standards CSA available here. See the Books or the Research Article tabs for specific advice, and this guide. You can always contact me for advice. It's also important to organize the documents you find to save time later.

You can use a citation manager Zotero or Mendeley to track what you find in your browser. It is normal to go back and refine your topic while you are researching, or to search some more while you are writing! But you can save time by thinking of a plan first. Here are a few suggestions. Perhaps you are looking for something more specific: effect of fly ash on freeze-thaw durability of concrete. If you are looking for the most recent research, you might want to look for conference papers or preprints, which are published more quickly than traditional journal papers. If you are looking for research on a very specific question, or your professor has told you to use peer-reviewed articles, you can use a Research Article database. Or you may need to start with a professional document such as a standard or design code. It takes place Thursday, December 8 and Friday, December 9 of this year, at the Marriott Fairfield Inn in Kelowna. The workshop, geared toward structural engineers, begins with connections in the CSA 086 Wood Design Standard and progresses from there, covering both timber frame and log structure connections. Video shows the flow of how the combination works.
